

THE MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY

When the princess and Norton went away Jones stole quietly up to Florence's room and threw up the curtain. Two round points of light flashed from the window, but the satirical smile on Jones' lips was not observed. He went to the door, opened it cautiously, a hand turned back the rug and removed a section of the flooring. Out of this cavity he raised a box. There was a letter on the lid; in fact, the name of its owner, Stanley Hargreave. Jones replaced the flooring, tucked the box under his arm and made his exit.

The man lounging in the shadow heard a faint whistle. It was the signal agreed upon. The man Felton ran across the street and boldly rang the bell. It was only then that Florence missed the ever present butler. She hesitated, and then sent Susan to the door.

"I must see Mr. Jones upon vitally important business," said Susan, and very stealthily closed the door behind her.

fore Felton's foot succeeded in getting inside.

It was time to act. He ran around to the rear. The ladder convinced him that Jones had tricked him. He was wild with rage. He was over the wall in an instant. Away down the back street his eye discovered his man in full flight. He gave chase. As he came to the first corner he was nearly knocked over by a man coming the other way.

"Who are you bumping into?" growled Felton.

"Not so fast, Felton!"

"Who the devil are you?"

The stranger made a sign which Felton instantly recognized.

"Quiet! What has happened?"

"Jones has the million and is making his getaway. See him hiking toward the water front!"

The two men began to run. There followed a thrilling chase. Jones engaged a motorboat and it was speeding seaward when the two pursuers arrived. They were not lagging. There was another boat and the made for it.

"A hundred if you overtake that boat," said Felton's strange companion.

Felton eyed him narrowly. There was something familiar about that voice.

Great plumes of water shot up into the air. It did not prove a short race by any means. It took half an hour for the pursuer to overhail the pursued.

"Is that Jones?"

"Yes," Felton tried his revolver into the air in hopes of terrifying Jones' engineer, but there was five hundred yards between that villain's eyes.

"Let them get a little nearer," shouted the butler.

The engineer let down the speed a notch. The other boat crept up within twenty yards. Jones caught a perfect range. He would have to find the spot again.

"Surrender!" yelled Felton.

In reply Jones raised the previous box and deliberately dropped it into the sea. Then he turned his automatic upon his pursuers and was occupied in setting their last affairs.

All this within the space of an hour. During dinner that night (there was now a cook) Jones walked about the dining table rubbing his hands together from time to time.

"Jones," said Florence, "why do you rub your hands like that?"

"Was I rubbing my hands, Miss Florence?" he asked innocently. (To be continued.)

THE PANHANDLE WOMAN MODE IN DEVELOPMENT

Combination of All Good Qualities of "Old" and "New" Type of Women.

For nearly four years from the day Kew was manufactured in the garden of Eden until late in the 19th century all women were divided into one class. They had no class name. They did not need any. They were all just mere women.

But late in the 19th century a different character appeared on the horizon of the woman's world. She was restless, ambitious, energetic, and not content in the domestic circle. She was the result of her sister's.

The first class never had been analyzed until the second class appeared and then for the sake of convenience men called the first "The Old Type" and the second "The New Woman" for her all round home qualities and the New Woman for her all round away from home qualities.

With the dawning of the 20th century there appeared a third character on the stage of The Woman's World. She did not seem to be an outgrowth or off spring of either of the others for she was both alike and unlike both of them. By a careful analysis of her character we find most hereditary traits of the old woman, but she was not perfectly balanced. The strong and weak elements of both the old and new woman, and in honor of the new country in which she found herself we will christen her "The Panhandle Woman."

The early training and pioneer experiences of this new species has been such as to make of her a strong, self-reliant, and a hard worker. She is the center of love and attraction and the controlling influence in her home. But her new vision of opportunity has lifted the horizon of her home from her own back fence and stretched it out into the world. She is the center of the world. She is the center of the world. She is the center of the world.

She is the center of the world. She is the center of the world. She is the center of the world. She is the center of the world. She is the center of the world.

ated to meet the emergency and the women came to the rescue; cultivated women, college women, society women (if you will believe it) such as we have in the Panhandle. Throughout this intense—intense—harvest—I have never heard of but one man looking for help for his wife and she was an invalid. The women have done up their work in the home and look out into the fields. I know a young mother, who not able to go to the field herself, took care of her own, her mother's and her sister's families, so that they could help the men.

Is the Panhandle woman a true daughter? I know a Panhandle college girl who, when the call to duty came, laid down her school brush and palette, put on her sun bonnet and shocked case till the last shock was capped and grida she shocked brought a higher price than that shocked by men. Why? Because she was working to save her father's crop and they were working for these dollars a day.

I know a man who paid six dollars a day to two men to help stack his hauled wheat and when he sold it he got only 47 cents per bushel because it was so damaged by rain. While other wheat from the same field stacked in the same yard exposed to the same weather thrashed and marketed the same day brought the highest market price. The latter was stacked for the man's wife. Who takes the most interest in a man's business any way? His wife, and daughters or a hired man?

Strange as it may seem, through out all this heroic work of the Panhandle heroines I have not heard of a single man, magazine, preacher or politician praising her of being out of her sphere, or criticizing her for neglecting her home, to take a man's place. Each is the character of the Panhandle woman. A more beautifully balanced combination of culture and common sense, of love for her home and loyalty to duty would be hard to conceive.

Her faithfulness to the church, needs no comment. She is doing nine-tenths of the work in the school room. In studies, in working for cleaner, prettier towns as well as homes. All she needs to make her love as attractive as her home is recognition and appreciation. (She can do the work and the inspiration that will come by co-operating with all the other Panhandle women.)

NEWS FORECAST FOR THE COMING WEEK

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 1.—The working out of the Mexican problem, the progress of the trust legislation in Congress and possible developments in the European scene combine to give promise of an abundance of news during the week. In addition, the beginning of August will see the starting up of political campaigns in many parts of the country.

Politicians will center their attention particularly on Kansas and Missouri, where general primaries are to be held Tuesday for the selection of candidates for United States senator and representatives in Congress and, in Kansas, a complete State ticket from governor down. In both states public interest is concentrated largely to the senatorial contests. Both Senator Stone of Missouri and Senator Hoke of Kansas are candidates for re-election and both have opposition. The results of the voting in Kansas will be carefully analyzed, since they may be expected to afford a more or less reliable indication of the relative strength of the three parties in the next election.

Numerous large conventions are scheduled for the week. At Niagara Falls there will be held an important conference of Catholics of the United States and Canada favorable to the prohibition of the liquor traffic. Other gatherings of more or less interest will be the convention of the Knights of Pythias, at Winnipeg, the meeting of the supreme council of the Knights of Columbus, at St. Paul; the annual convention of the American Osteopathic Association, at Philadelphia; the national gathering of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, at Kansas City and the annual meeting of the Association of Canadian Clubs, at Vancouver.

Dr. Jose Vicente Cocha, the newly elected President of the Republic of Colombia, will be installed in office Friday. Other events of the week should include the World Church Peace Conference, at Constance, Germany; the tenth International Esperanto Congress, in Paris; and the International Dental Congress and the International Veterinary Congress, both of which will hold forth in London.

Other events of the week will include the arrival of the Dominion's Royal Commission in Canada, the dedication of a statue of Baron von Stueben, at Ulen, N. Y.; the annual regatta of the National Association of Amateur Carpenters, at Philadelphia; and the jubilee celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of the organization of Montana territory and the twenty-fifth anniversary of Statehood.
